The heart of Richmond has a new past.

Four scant blocks from where Thomas Jefferson's Capitol preserves the seat of government in Virginia, in the lacy shade of grillwork balconies and intimate courtyard, the new Security Federal building, at the corner of Fifth and Franklin Streets, adds something new to the Richmond skyline from the past—authentic New Orleans! With authentic restoration, Security Federal has created an oasis of Old World charm in the heart of downtown. In keeping with a Richmond that has respect for the past, the individual's way of doing things, and appreciation for beauty and change, a pride in community betterment—you'll find Security Federal is that kind of savings place.

OUR MEMBERS ARE BUILDING A NEW VIRGINIA.

It takes much more than steel, concrete and machinery to preserve and construct the buildings that will shape the face of Virginia's future.

It takes responsible contractors and skilled tradesmen building with integrity. Men who have had years of apprenticeship and on-the-job training to become the best in their profession. These are the men of the member firms of the Virginia Branch of the Associated General Contractors of America.

America's largest single industry is construction. It comprises 15% of our Gross National Product and touches virtually every phase of our lives. Look for companies displaying our seal. You can be assured that they are responsible contractors doing quality work.

It's good to know that they're on the job every day preserving our architectural heritage and building a new Virginia.

How to find buried telephone cable the hard way.

The hard way to find buried telephone cable is to dig it up, accidentally.

The easy way to find it is to call C&P Telephone, before you start digging.

We can tell you whether or not it's safe to dig without digging up a cable.

This way, you won't have a lot of your guys sitting around while we repair a broken cable.

And you won't have a couple thousand people mad at you for interrupting their phone service.

Before you dig, call us.

A Small Monument in a Remote Place

TODAY HE WOULD be called a "political activist." While he never ran for any office (although he did participate peripherally in a couple of presidential campaigns) and was never appointed to any public service position, he worked passionately and tirelessly on causes which he believed advanced the public good. He did this as a writer—a very controversial writer, and probably the most many-sided and prolific writer of the 20th century. Since he was writing for the support of his family in the cruel world of the independent, unaffiliated freelance writer, as well as giving his time and energy to causes, his health was eroded and he died of a heart attack at the age of 58, in 1955. His name was Bernard De Voto—Benny to his friends—and his significance in our 20th century society was brought to mind by Wallace Stegner's recent and excellent biography.

This biography has a personal appeal for me because Benny De Voto, as an influential critic, had been a strong supporter of my first book, and remained a staunch supporter of my work as long as literary criticism was one of the hats he wore. We established a friendly relationship but without intimacy, so that I was unprepared for his internal and external struggles as revealed by Stegner. When I met Benny De Voto first, at dinner at the Harvard Club in New York, he was one of the top literary figures of his day: influential as both critic and essayist, he had been the editor of the Saturday Review, an instructor at Harvard, the author of a scholarly book on Mark Twain, and had the facility to knock out slick serials, under a pseudonym, for such magazines as the Saturday Evening Post, Colliers and Redbook. Geniality itself and a brilliant conversationalist, he had the faculty of putting a younger writer immediately at ease, and my impression of this charming gentleman was of a self-assured success in the literary establishment.

Stegner's biography shows this impression to be only the surface man. De Voto was a born outsider. His life was the arena of struggles requiring the courage of a lion and the pouring out of energy with no account of time or consequences. He grew up in Ogden, Utah, when the turn-of-the-century small city was a pretty raw place to the young De Voto. One of his parents was a Mormon and one a Christian and, since Benny became neither one nor the other, he was not accepted by either faction. To make matters worse, he was so plain that to those not attracted to his personality he was positively "ugly." In a vicious personal attack on him in print Sinclair Lewis, himself no beauty, had the bad taste to refer to his "frog-like face."

After one wretched year at the University of Utah, he transferred to Harvard, in the pre-World War I era when it was a citadel of Boston Brahmins, to whom any public school was beyond their ken and a person from west of the Alleghenies an outlander. Despite this handicap and whatever hurts endured, De Voto formed a lasting attachment for Cambridge. Following his graduation and after a stint of teaching at Northwestern, where he began his torrent of writing, he returned to Cambridge as his permanent residence and landed a part-time instructor's job at Harvard. However, some years later, when he was well established—with criticisms, essays, several novels and his Twain book— (Continued on page 108)

Super Tree.

Believe it or not, this tiny seedling will be the parent of a whole forest of stronger, healthier trees. Super trees, as they are called by forest geneticists. They're a result of Chesapeake Corporation's forest genetics program.

By grafting cuttings from a superior tree onto a sturdy normal tree, such as this seedling and thereafter controlling pollination, it will produce seed with all the characteristics of the super tree.

Chesapeake's foresters are constantly working to develop new methods for growing superior trees. For we at Chesapeake believe in the forests. They have to be protected and wisely used to supply man with his growing needs.

Forest genetics. Just another way Chesapeake is working with nature to serve man.

he suffered his deeper hurt at Harvard, from which he never recovered.

His application for an assistant professorship, which would have given him tenure on the Harvard faculty, was coldly rejected by President Conant, despite De Voto's success as a teacher, his literary position, and the importunities of friends. Conant had scant interest in the humanities and evidently De Voto had some enemies, for, known more for honesty than for diplomacy, he was indifferent to where the chips fell in the forthrightness of his published work. Exclusion from the Harvard faculty effected De Voto's whole future.

The wounding rejection caused him to be unaffiliated with any institution. This was more of a loss as a prop to morale than in practicality (although it was a loss there too), and, most damaging of all, it deprived him of any regular source of income for the support of his wife and two children. This forced him into the unrelieved stress of the economic hazards of the free-lance writer.

Up to a certain age, the slick serials, which he grew to detest to the point of agony in facing them, supplied the bulk of his income. Most of his crusading writing went into essays, largely in his monthly "Easy Chair" department in Harper's, which was not a big paying assignment; he also lectured widely, although many audiences proved unreceptive and in time too lecturing on tour became unpleasant and taxing. In addition to his Twain book, he spent months of frustrating work on Twain's private papers, which went down the drain over the intransigence of Twain's daughter in releasing relevant material. He also worked on editing an Americana series of books planned by Knopf, which died with the Depression. He conducted a voluminous correspondence, much of it concerning his causes, which he wrote at night, sometimes as late as twelve or one o'clock.

In addition to all of this, his true ambition, involved with his feeling for America, was to write novels, of which four were published. Here was another heartbreak: his novels were reviewed with unenthusiastic respect, never really praised, and their sales were from poor to modest at best. After the four, on which he had spent his chief energy, his highest hopes and secret dreams, he was enough of a professional to call it a day. Something himself was suppressed when he closed the door on those aspirations, and so while after he blocked those impulses De Voto lost the knack of turning his slick serials. No matter how much he agonized, the manufactured work would not come, and in his middle age he lost this source of income.

In De Voto's forties, with fiction, to him, he turned to a new field which he did his best work and probably his most enduring—three histories of aspects of the frontier West. In writing these splendid books, Benny turned to his own beginnings. For many years, as if in defiant emphasis of his outlander's Western heritage, De Voto had concerned himself with the frontier—both in writing (as in the Twain book) and in conservationism, which bulked increasingly larger in his career long before it became fashionable. In the three history books, he put it all together: his deep feeling for the environment of his early impressions, his enthusiasm, his practice of research organization, a gift for synthesis, and his highly developed talent for readable writing.

Of course, since the books were footnoted and written with a broom sweep, some academicians found fault with his informal narrative technique, but they were awarded between them three, the nation's highest awards in history: the Pulitzer, the Bancroft, the National Book Award, and generally received critical acclaim. Although they sold well, they were not the kind of books to hit a literary jackpot, with a big paperback price or a picture sale, and Benny De Voto was still up against it in providing for his wife and children, who were then in a private school.

He got an agent to scrounge around for magazine markets, writing for anybody, and bore the ignominy of rejections from magazines of a caliber which would have scorned in the days when Mencken of the old Mercury eagerly sought his work. Those years were bad. He began to feel that most of the time and no specific ailments could be found by doctors which he respected, especially one physician who was his intimate friend. Apparently there is nothing to diagnose in a writer worn out by overwork and strain of his hazardous occupation. He was with his doctor friend in a New York hotel room when the fatal attack came and the long ordeal was over for Bernard De Voto.

Along with the fine reviews received by the Stegner biography, including nt page in the New York Times ok Review, one reviewer made this mation: "This is a dull book, bese it is about a dull man." Most ters, in fact, do not make good sub-ts. Their battlefields are confined to quiet room in which alone they live their defeats and triumphs and vate anguishes. Benny De Voto was different except for the number of porters of his Western conservation rk and the number of his friends, l of enemies too, for he followed the ely way of working outside any erie, and alone you are fair game the malicious, the envious smallnded and for any kook with an ax grind.

But here in an era when the apothis of Scott Fitzgerald represents his stefulness as typical of the mad enties, it does seem gratuitous to diss as "dull" this man of courage and egrity who was Fitzgerald's almost ct contemporary, one year younger. d it would seem too, scarcely twenty rs after his death, that the vitality his life work, the vitality of mind l spirit he brought to his work, uld have left more of an impact on country he so much loved and for ose welfare he gave so unstintingly himself. Yet, in the perspective of se twenty years the nation is so nged from the era of his political ivism that De Voto belongs in an oric time, when all our problems eared to be soluble.

De Voto was always too historical-ded to believe that the society was nipulable or that its citizens were able of perfectibility, but his faith the people's fundamental decency humanity supported his conviction t some inequities could be removed modified, some wastefulness of natl resources could be halted and e improvement made in the "qual-of life." That was in an age when United States, at the apogee of its ld power, felt confident of its united might and certain of its destiny. ow that confidence is shaken, unainty has replaced its former certy about the nation's destiny, and people, uncomfortably aware that her their power nor their prosperity nlimited, are troubled by a vague ization that the United States is not nune to history. In this time of nging self-perceptions, the country nvolved in struggling against out-n institutions and traditions, against fragmenting affects of narrow parol self-interest, and in struggling n the unwanted new. There is no ight left to devote to the "quality ife," and causes to which Bernard De Voto and other activists devoted themselves seem both trivial and transitory compared to the enormity and complexity of the world problems which are now involving an unprepared America.

While there is still a reservoir of decency and humanity in the American people, those traits do little against the loss of assurance that good will and legislation can cure our social and economic ills, that growth always brings about desirable ends and that our version of "progress" satisfies the human spirit. While we observe the failure of our foreign aid to prevent poverty in those "undeveloped nations" whose population growths represent a potential crisis, we observe the neglect at home which permits the decline of some of our cities into dangerous wastelands. A moment's reflection indicates the coming need of a basic change in our institutions, our sociological-physical structure, and our perception of ourselves. A realization of the enormity of these changes, particularly in government, makes many of the various causes of today appear—in historical perspective — as trivial and peripheral as do those of such activists as Bernard De Voto in that lost America.

One of the Rocky Mountain states has a small monument to Bernard De Voto in a remote place, as a tribute to the selflessness of his devotion to the cause of conservation in the West.
When we look today at the needs caused by the changes already taking place in America and those changes confronting America, the most we can hope for in our political activists, whether or not in official position, is the same selfless devotion to some conviction for the common good. It doesn't matter whether or not in historical perspective the cause appears as transitory and peripheral as do De Votos' today: what is important is examples of selflessness. To tap the reservoir of decency and humanity in the people, such example are desperately necessary to counteract the disrespect for the antiquated national government —like a diseased dinosaur surviving from another age.

Could You Answer?

The Following Facts May Help - - - -

1. A Credit Union is an association of people, owned and democratically controlled by their members who agree to save their money together and to make loans to each other at low interest.
2. A Credit Union is organized by members of a particular group—for instance, people working for the same employer; people who belong to the same church or labor union; or people who live in the same closely knit community. Membership is open to all within the group regardless of race, color or creed.
3. A Credit Union teaches its members thrift by encouraging them to save regularly. Members are paid dividends on their savings.

 - b. The Supervisory Committee of members audit Credit Union records each year.
 - c. Credit Unions are required by law to carry surety bond coverage.
7. A Credit Union is a separate corporation, owned and operated entirely by its members and the sponsoring organization has no legal or financial responsibility for it.
